Business and industry generally take a favorable view of the industrial moblization plan proposed by the Senate Postwar Policy and Planning Committee.

Senators George and Murray immediately followed up the report by introducing a bill on contract termination. Senator George said the measure was designed to provide a fair and speedy settlement of war contracts and a strong foundation for full employment.

The report and the George-Murray bill inaugurated a legislative program to provide a blueprint for guiding industry in reconversion from war to peacetime production.

A drastic reorganization of the War Production Board to smooth the way for reconversion has been charted and is now being studied. The new plan would split WPB into two groups, with one working on war production and the other on reconversion and civilian production.

Although Congress is considering simplification of individual income tax returns, there is no likelihood that tax law revisions can be made in time to give any relief to taxpayers before March 15. However, leaders hope that withholding taxes may make it unnecessary for 30,000,000 taxpayers to file returns in 1945.

Rubber Director Bradley Dewey has announced some bad news for motorists. Mr. Dewey warned that because of increased military demands, 1944 passenger tire production will fall between 6,000,000 and 12,000,000 short of the previously set goal of 30,000,000 tires.

More Activities Shown In Local Y. Gymnasium Class; Everyone Urged To Come

More and more our boys are taking to gym apparatus as the major part of their work in the weekly health classes. The Friendly Indians are doing some fine work on the mats, tumbling, performing acrobatics and relay races. The Intermediates are working on parallel bars, horizontal bar, flying rings and mats. This is the kind of gymnasium participation that really develops body muscles and strength. Some boys at the beginning are very clumsy and awkward on the mats and apparatus, but, after a few days practice they gain their poise and ability at the same time their body control is being improved. Atheletics are good for exercise, but, they will not give all around body development that gymnastics will.

Christ In The Andes

Christ in the Andes is up so high
That when you look at it, it seems to touch the sky,
Between two mountains, as you can see
And wonder how it can be.
But it is there, from morn' 'till night,
And when the stars are overhead,
It stands there still, like it is dead.

South America

Let's take a trip to South America
Great wonders we're to see;
The climate is mild, we travel by air
So come along with me.
In Brazil we see swamps and jungles
And great coffee fields.
In Argentina, sheep and cattle graze
On the grassy hills.
We'll stop to buy a Panama hat
That's made in Ecuador
To wear to Chile to do some fishing
Along the rugged shore.

South America

It is a lovely sight
Down South America way
To watch the moonlit night
Fade into a beautiful day.
When all their work is done
They join in a merry throng.
And dance to the beat of the drums
And to gay laughter and son.

Clarence M. Guggenheimer

The hand of fate struck another blow which is very difficult to comprehend when Clarence M. Guggenheimer was claimed by death. Those who had the privilege of knowing the departed realized that he was a wonderful person. His spirit of good cheer, his charitableness and his incessant desire to serve were very manifest and brought to all a realization that he truly had a heart of gold.

Although he was not widely known in the local mill communities, Mr. Guggenheimer not only possessed a keen interest in the welfare of all connected with the Cone Mills, but he, behind the scenes, through his ability and keen judgment, truly contributed to their welfare. He was a director of all the Cone Mills and he did not let his responsibilities weigh lightly but gave serious and broad thought to each and every matter that came to his attention.

His effectiveness with Cone Export and Commission Company and the Cone Mills was great, expansive and far reaching.

His memory will be assuredly cherished for many years to come.

Grady Jay Shepherd

The will of God supersedes the will of man. Grady J. Shepherd has passed away. It was the will of the thousands who knew and loved him that Grady Shepherd live on and continue to bestow riches in friendship and service, but Providence willed otherwise and the physical Grady Shepherd is no longer with us.

We can but bemoan his passing. Sorrow is naturally our lot. Being human, we could not, if we wanted to, accept such a loss without feeling deep, penetrating pangs of sorrow. One with the sterling qualities of Grady Shepherd leaves a void when such a one departs from the world of the living. Time will permit us to soften the edges of our sorrow, and a realization that his memory will continue to serve will help in easing our first feeling of emptiness caused by his departure.

To eulogize Grady J. Shepherd is difficult, not because his life did not lend itself to superlative eulogy but because we who knew him intimately are too filled with thoughts of our intimacies with him to be able to properly condense our appraisals of his worth as a friend and Christian gentleman, a loyal and efficient worker.

Outstanding was his sane, practical devotion to and guidance of his splendid family. To his church he gave the type of devotion which only a person possessed with ideal religious spirit can give. In filling his responsible position in business he was frequently tried and found not wanting. His efficiency and loyalty were exemplary.

As a friend, he measured up to the fullest extent.

The world is assuredly richer because Grady J. Shepherd lived. Although the call from above came at an early time for such a man, we must admit that he lived a full life, if one can judge a full life by deeds and accomplishments.

During these dark and trying days when it is difficult to fathom the future, we can gain some hope from lives of men such as our departed friend; for if more and more people live such lives as he lived and practice such precepts as he practiced more rays of hope will penetrate the darkness and there will be a greater assurance of the coming of a better day.

The life of our dear friend can be but an inspiration to those of us he has left behind to strive to perpetuate his splendid principles. Although he has left in body, his spirit will not die.

This Business Of Living

Some Private-Work Plans

"Hm!" snapped Aunt Matilda, giving a smart rap to her morning paper. "All this talk about the government planning postwar 'public works.' I'd feel more comfortable about how things'll be after the war if folks had some private works planned for themselves.

"Everybody can do some planning now that'll help provide jobs after the war," the old lady went on. "I've got work laid out myself.

"There's my front steps, for instance. They need fixing the worst way, but they're going to wait till after the war's over. Then I always did want that porch off the back parlor glassed in. The house needs painting, and I'm hankering for flowered paper in the guest room. And my old gas range doesn't work any too well either."

"My goodness," I exclaimed. "Why, you've got a month's work planned for half a dozen men right there!" Nodding, Aunt Matilda resumed:

"If everybody in this town made out a plan like that right now, wouldn't there be a tidy bit of work for the lumber business and paint business and glass business, and the paper business and gas range business?"

"Certainly would be, Auntie." I agreed. "That's what business men are advocating, too. Because—obviously—postwar jobs depend on all the houses people build after the war and the new things they buy and the repairs they make. If we can have a few million private-work plans like yours, we won't need to have the government doing our job-planning for us!"

American families have received 36 billion dollars from their life insurance policies since 1929, more than twice the total of all life insurance assets in that year.

WARTIME HOMEMAKER

By The HOMEMAKING SPECIALISTS General Electric Consumers Institute

Look for the deepest colored greens, the brightest green beans and peas, the brilliant orange carrot, the deepest red beet, the whitest cauliflower and you'll be getting more vitamins for your vegetable money, advises Dr. D. K. Tressler, Director of Food Research at the General Electric Consumers Institute.

Perhaps you have wondered, when purchasing fresh vegetables, how to judge whether the beans your grocer offered were a better guy (nutritionally speaking) than the peas. Here is Dr. Tressler's "rule of the thumb" which you can follow in shopping for fresh produce.

Look for both bright, uniform color to denote vitamin content and crispness to denote freshness and proper handling from harvest to grocer. The two go hand in hand to help you count the vitamins in the vegetables you buy so that the food you serve your family will have as much nutritive value as possible.

When a vegetable is not brilliant in color it doesn't necessarily mean that it is not fresh and crisp. Some varieties of a vegetable are paler in color than other varieties. The paler varieties generally have less vitamin content than those varieties having the bright, deep color. For color in a vegetable is a direct index to the vitamin content.

Take celery as a good example. The white celery which attracts our eye in the vegetable mart doesn't contain nearly as many vitamins as the celery tinged with green or the celery which is almost a decided green, even though the white celery may be as crisp and fresh as the green stalk. Bleaching celery (covering it during the last stages of growth to produce a white stalk) has been practiced by the truck gardener because his customers (you) liked the appearance of the white celery better than when it was green. But, as truck gardeners come to realize the value of vitamins, you will find more and more green celery appearing on the market. And as the homemakers realize the importance of vitamins in food she buys, she will look for and buy the green celery in preference to the white.

Plan to serve at least one dish a day of fresh green vegetables such as spinach, or a fresh vegetable salad mixture. If used with fresh, crisp deeply colored vegetables, the recipes below will be chock full of vitamins.

Spinach Salad

Wash, drain, and remove stems of—
- 5 cups uncooked spinach and chop

Add—
- ½ cup chopped, cooked beets
- ½ cup chopped celery
- 1 medium Bermuda onion

Marinate with—
French Dressing

Mix well—
Garnish with
- 2 hard-cooked eggs, sliced

Keep cold and crisp until ready to serve

Vegetable Supper Salad

Dissolve—
- 2 pks. prepared lemon gelatin

in—
- 2 cups boiling water

Add—
- 1 cup cold water
- 2 tbsp. vinegar
- 1 tsp. salt

Place in refrigerator to chill.
When mixture begins to congeal, fold in—
- 1 cup chopped celery
- 1 cup shredded cabbage
- ½ cup shredded carrots
- 1 shredded green pepper

Turn into greased ring mold and place in refrigerator to congeal.

Turn out on plate and garnish with parsley or watercress for serving.

Revolution Red Cross Dressing Class News

The Red Cross Dressing class met on Tuesday evening with an attendance of twelve interested workers. Four hundred and twenty-five dressings were made. Those attending were Misses Fanny Paul Ivey, Betty Jane Byrd, Mesdames W. M. Leach, Kate Newnan, John Johnson, Ida Strickland, Lucille Ritter, L. G. Newton, N. B. Martin, W. F. Johnson, Lowell T Steel and W. L. Newnam.

As the witness left the stand and while his back was turned to the judge, he laughed out loud. At once the judge recalled him for contempt of court.

Witness—"Did you see me laugh?"

Judge—"No, but I heard you."

Witness — "Insufficient evidence, Your Honor."

An Eastern go-getter spied a lazy Indian Chief lolling indolently at the door of his teepee somewhere out West.

"Chief," remonstrated the go-getter, "why don't you get yourself a job?"

"Why?" grunted the Chief.

"Well, you could earn a lot of money. Maybe thirty or forty dollars a week."

"Why?" insisted the Chief.

"Oh, if you worked hard and saved your money, you'd soon have a bank account. Wouldn't you like that?"

"Why?" again asked the Chief.

"For gosh sakes!" shouted the exasperated go-getter. "With a big bank account you could retire, and then you wouldn't have to work any more . . ."

"Not working now," pointed out the Indian.

Prisoners Aid Extended Into Philippines By Y's.

are all Swedish, and it is through Sweden that news of their activities reaches this country.

No time will be lost in sending Y.M.C.A. delegates into the Philippines to help meet the recreational, educational and religious needs of the prisoners of war there, Mr. Arnold was advised.

Mr. Cedergren also brought first-hand information about American prisoners of war in Germany. He visited prison camps there and talked with Americans as recently as last November.

"I can honestly say from my own experience that the spirit of the American prisoners is excellent," the Swedish delegate said. "They are being treated correctly. Any shortcomings are due to the scarcity of certain items in Germany, and not through lack of desire of the military authorities there to live up to the terms of the Geneva Convention of 1929."

Mr. Cedergren described two camps which he visited before coming to America. Stalag Luft III, where air force officers from the United States, Britain and Canada are interned, is "divided into six compounds, which, when full, will each contain 1,400 men. They are housed in one-story wooden barracks, and sleep in double-deck bunks of a somewhat primitive type. The camp, like all others, is surrounded by barbed wire."

The two American senior officers at this camp, Col. Delmar T. Spivey and Col. C. G. Goodrich, were highly praised by Mr. Cedergren. They are respected by the German authorities for their forthright stand for the welfare of prisoners in their camp, he said.

The other camp, Stalag III-B, holds about 3,000 American enlisted men, most of whom were taken prisoner in North Africa. Of these, about 1300 are confined to the camp, and 1,400 are in working detachments.

"The whole atmosphere of this camp is good and the morale of the men excellent," Mr. Cedergren said. He commended Sergant Clyde M. Bennett, the spokesman for the Americans, as being exceptionally able and well-liked. This camp, he said, has the best library of any camp he had visited, and a camp chapel which the men had decorated beautifully and in which they take much pride.

Educational classes, music and the drama, and indoor and outdoor sports are flourishing in both camps. Of the officers at Stalag Luft III, the majority are attending classes, studying languages, engineering, agriculture, accounting, and many other subjects.

"I can say for the representatives of the War Prisoners Aid of the Y.M.C.A. in Europe that we will leave nothing undone to continue providing the men in these camps with the supplies needed for those activities that make their life in the prison camps bearable and even in some respects profitable," Mr. Cedergren said.

Tribute was also paid by Mr. Cedergren to the work of the International Red Cross, which, with the aid of the American Red Cross and other national movements, provides material relief for prisoners of war. With prison camp fare supplemented by Red Cross food parcels which they receive regularly, the American prisoners in Germany have enough to eat and the right kind of food, he said.

Don Herold Says:

He Does His Tricks Better for a Little Sugar

Rewards Pay Rewards

Going to college was the easiest way I ever found to make a living. But it had no future. After four years, father stopped sending checks.

Since then, I've worked. And I've watched other people work. I've even hired some people to work for me.

And I've noticed that the best way to get people to work or think is to pay them for it—give 'em some incentive.

For some strange reason, Americans want rewards for effort, for initiative, for hustling.

Businessmen have learn that a good way to get good work out of good people is to pay 'em good.

Now if the government will learn that a good way to encourage business to take chances and make a lot of jobs, is to let business take the initiative itself and allow it to make some money—well, we'll have postwar prosperity in America to beat the band.

In recent years, politicians have been saying "Why don't you business guys make more jobs? Wham! Sock! Take that and THAT!"

Even I would rather starve than work or make plans with that kind of encouragement.

Where is your social security account card? Is is being worn threadbare in your pocket? Is it lying loose under a pile of worthless papers? You may need that card when you least expect it. Young Girls' Circle Of Methodist Church Meets

The Young Girl's Circle of the Proximity Methodist church met Monday for their February meeting with Mrs. Jim Baynes at her home on Asheboro street.

Mrs. Jay Suttles presided, and introduced the guest speaker, Mrs. H. B. Pickard, who talked most interestingly on the subject, "The Light of The World".

As their special monthly project, the girls planned to take charge of the Red Cross dressings room the second Thursday night in each month.

At the close of the business meeting Mrs. Baynes served a dessert course to the following Mesdames Alton Moffitt Fred Marshell, Lacy Wyrick, Lee Foy Suttles, John Scott, Nay Wolfe, John Hodgin, Jack Hughes Jr., Ralph Ritter Woodrow Hanner, Jay Suttles, Woodrow Carruthers, and Miss Willard Walker.

Cotton Suit and Dress Form Basic Wardrobe

What woman doesn't wish that all the pieces of her wardrobe would fit together and form a variety of costumes for different occasions? Just to show that it's easy to plan a whole spring wardrobe with the smallest number of garments, the fashion director of the Cotton-Textile Institute and National Cotton Council devised a basic spring wardrobe with every item of cotton from top to toe!

The whole wardrobe consists of just two complete costumes, with complementary accessories, but every garment and accessory fits in with every other bit of apparel like the pieces of a jig-saw puzzle. In addition to making the wardrobe suitable for most occasions, it was also designed for three seasons' wear in moderate climates—year-round in balmy ones.

Every spring must have its suit, and nothing looks fresher than navy, so the starting point of the wardrobe is a cotton gabardine dressmaker suit in navy made from a pattern. The simple smart lines of the suit make it appropriate for almost any occassion at any time of day, depending on accompanying accessories.

The other costume is a shirt-waist dress of pink, blue and white plaid gingham, also made from a pattern with the new cardigan neck. One hat, of navy cotton gabardine to match the suit, goes with both outfits, but looks as though it had been especially designed for each because Helene Garnell made it with alternate trimmings that pin on—a set of plaid gingham hatpins to match the dress and a white pique tailored bow for the suit. The white bird's eye pique trim also match a gilet and gloves designed by Merry Hull. Another pair of gloves of the navy gabardine with gingham cuffs, gabardine handbag, and shoes and lacy cotton mesh stockings complete the wardrobe. The shoes were purchased when OPA recently ruled that for a limited time certain types of footwear could be bought without a ration stamp.

This is how they fit together. A perfect Easter ensemble is formed with the suit, white pique dickey and gloves, blue gabardine bag, hat with white bow, cotton lace stockings, and gabardine shoes; and this is an ideal spring-time turnout for street wear, office, traveling, committee meetings, or war relief parties later.

When the gingham dress is worn under the suit, to look like a blouse, with the hat now sporting its gingham pins and the navy gloves with gingham turnbacks, this is a less formal costume than the blue and white but will go nearly anywhere during spring, summer and fall.

Remove the suit skirt, and there's a street outfit for late spring and cool summer days. The same gabardine shoes and lacy hose are worn with each costume.

Besides these five variations from the two outfits, one can have as many other changes of scenery as desired by adding appropriate accessories. For instance, a soft dressy effect can be obtained by wearing a ruffled pink organdie blouse or gilet and hat trim with the suit.

For those mature women who say they would "live in cottons all spring and summer if we could find them," this cotton wardrobe is the answer and can be easily made by anyone clever with the needle.

Cottons Camouflage Decorative And Architectural Faults

Recent exhibits in the decorating departments of important stores around the country prove how wonderful fabrics can be when it comes to disguising backgrounds as well as furnishings without recourse to architectural changes. All one needs to shut out an ugly view, brighten up a bare room, transform Victorian furniture, or make cast-offs really attractive are cotton fabrics.

The Cotton-Textile Institute and National Cotton Council found out, for instance, that the panels of an old door can be covered with bright red and white plaid chintz, and the same cotton applied to the wall surrounding the door. A weary fireplace becomes a summer conservatory when a few wooden shelves are built above the mantel and each shelf slipcovered in gay chintz which is repeated in the covering of flower pots and a dramatic fan that serves as a fireplace screen.

A cretonne screen conceals an unsightly radiator, eyesore in many homes while a table and chair placed in front of the screen are tied into the picture by covering them with the same cotton.

Just because there isn't enough furniture to go into the foyer doesn't mean it must look bare. Flowered cotton twill can be used to cover the wall around a mirror to look like a frame. A simple shelf beneath the mirror is then covered with a plain sateen to blend with the colors in the print, and the print used as a skirt on the shelf. This idea can also be used to contrive a dressing table where none exists.

Coverings of cheery chintz to match the draperies give Victorian furniture a fresh look and links it to the room.

An old chest in the same setting is dressed up with a flowered chintz ruffle around the bottom and frills of the material surround drawer knobs as well as the mirror over it.

Plaid gingham in brown and yellow helps create a cheerful kitchen nook when used for cottage curtains at the window opening, as a tablecloth with plain fabric ruffle, and to slip-cover flower pots on the window ledge. Draperies of dark blue canvas with a white sailboat design repeat the color, fabric and motif of a bedspread for a boy's room. An easy solution for curtains in another boy's room is simply to use three long pieces of coarse fishnet, draping one of them across a wooden pole to look like a swag. The studio couch for this setting is covered with a tailored spread of red, white and blue cotton homespun which can take a lot of punishment.

The life insurance agents of the country have been responsible for the sale of more than five billion dollars of War Bonds since Pearl Harbor.
